Rick has focused his practice on civil and construction litigation for over 40 years. In the early 1980's, he formed a partnership known as Horne, Bistrow and Kaplan, P.C., which was one of the leading boutique construction law firms in Arizona.

Throughout his long and varied career, Rick has handled numerous complex construction matters for owners, architects, contractors, sub-contractors and suppliers. As a young lawyer, he successfully prosecuted a construction case involving a hotel in downtown Phoenix that resulted in judgment against the contractor for $1.6 million. He also successfully defended the State against road builders who sought multi-million dollars in damages arising from allegedly negligent construction designs or differing site conditions. He has handled many matters involving mechanics liens, construction defects, delay claims, contract interpretations, Miller Act and Little Miller Act suits, licensing, surety, and bad faith matters.

Rick has also acted as first chair in several jury trials and was lead counsel in numerous arbitrations and court trials. In 2005, the Arizona Department of Education asked Rick to serve as lead counsel in Flores v. Arizona, after Arizona was fined $2 million a day or $720 million a year by failing to comply with the Equal Education Opportunity Act of 1974. This high-stake case resulted in three trials, two trips to the Ninth Circuit, and one trip to the United States Supreme Court, where the Department's position was vindicated in a 5-4 decision. The Flores case was important not only because of the financial consequences, but also because of the guidelines promulgated by the Supreme Court as to how public bodies can remedy violations of federal law.

Finally, in 2011, Rick was asked to serve Arizona as Chief Deputy of the Office of the Attorney General. He spent four years in that capacity. Five separate division chiefs reported to him: 1) criminal; 2) civil; 3) public advocacy and civil rights; 4) child and family; and 5) solicitor general.
